Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Pursuant to a congressional request, GAO provided information on the Coast Guard s program for examining safety conditions aboard foreign cruise ships, focusing on whether: (1) flag nations cruise ship safety oversight was adequate; and (2) international standards for shipboard fire fighting training and emergency information were sufficient. GAO found that: (1) international safety standards did not adequately address shipboard safety problems including inoperable fire doors, improperly designed escape routes, and inadequate escape drills; (2) reasons for safety problems included inadequate inspections and varying safety standard interpretations; (3) the Coast Guard could not effectively use its safety examination program due to recording and analytical deficiencies in examinations and a lack of formal international safety standard training for inspectors; (4) some cruise ship personnel were not proficient in responding to shipboard fires because of inadequate international training standards, outdated training information, and the lack of shipboard instruction and drills for fire fighting crews; (5) cruise ship emergency information lacked clear emergency symbols and cabin information to sufficiently assist passengers; and (6) although the International Maritime Organization (IMO) has proposed improvements to shipboard emergency information, many problems persist.
