One of the suggestions was that the names of all the places in the County should be compiled, and the meanings of those names elucidated. It was stated that I had already extracted all the place-names from the photo-zincographic copy of Domesday Book, and had identified them as far as possible with the aid of Bawdwen s translation. Since then a more exact translation has appeared in the Yorkshire Archaeological Journal, but my copies of the names were taken from the photo-facsimiles, and to make the accuracy of the reading doubly sure the Journal version has been occasionally useful. Of all antiquarian British researches, I know no phase that has been brought into ridicule so much as the guesses at the meanings of our place-names, and I have shrunk from the task, and nothing but a sense of urgency that the work should be commenced for Yorkshire has induced me to brave the criticisms that must follow this first general effort for the County. I begin therefore on the surest grounds, following the advice given to the cook, - First, you must catch your hare. I had many fields in which to roam in search of the...
